Implementing Strategic Decisions: Four Key Success Factors

This paper reports an empirical study aimed at elucidating reasons for success or failure in the implementation of strategic decisions. Eleven decisions in six organizations were examined using a case-study approach. Findings highlight four factors that appear to be critical for the successful management of implementation: backing, clear aims and planning, and a conducive climate — as long as chance events do not get in the way. Perhaps surprisingly, other factors, such as having relevant experience, giving implementation priority, having abundant resources, an appropriate structure and implementing flexibly, appear to matter rather less.

Descriptors: strategic decision-making, implementation, decision success, strategy, performance.

Decision-making Research

There is now a substantial body of research on the making of strategic decisions in organizations. From the early work of Simon (1947, 1960) and March and Simon (1958) to writers such as Braybrooke and Lindblom (1963); Pettigrew (1973); Mintzberg et al. (1976); Heller et al. (1983); Nutt (1984, 1993); Hickson et al. (1986); Eisenhardt (1989a) and Kriger and Barnes (1992), the emphasis has been on describing and explaining how decisions are arrived at. Though, to some extent, decision making and implementation are interwoven — some aspects of implementation may start before decision processes have been finalized and some sub-decisions may be taken thereafter — they can be distinguished for analytical purposes. Hickson et al. (1986), for example, used the point at which the decision was officially sanctioned (by the Board or CEO) to provide an empirically identifiable 'cut-off' point for their very extensive study of decision making which looked at the process through 'gestation' to 'authorization'.

The majority of these studies do not go beyond this 'authorization stage', though there are exceptions (e.g. Dean and Sharfman 1996; Rodrigues and Hickson 1995; Nutt 1986, 1987, 1989). It is therefore not possible to find in them anything concerning the 'success' of decisions once implemented (however 'success' is defined, a point returned to later), and this

HVORDAN INDSAMLES OG ANVENDES FEEDBACK?

- Implementeringsprocesser giver behov for løbende feedback for...
 - ...eventuelt at justere implementeringen.
 - ...eventuelt at justere strategien
- Afhængig af tilgang lægges der typisk vægt på:
 - (Kvantitative) 'key performance indicators' (KPI)
 - (Kvalitativ) organisatorisk læring
- Tilsvarende forskel i hvem feedbacken primært er tiltænkt:
 - Topledelsen
 - Organisationen

KAN I SE FORSKELLEN?

Alternative tilgange til monitorering, feedback og tilpasning

"It took us some months to agree the strategic direction we have adopted with the board and there are ongoing discussions as to what the right key performance indicators are. There is a lot to consider here. We have defined strategic KPIs and linked them to financial KPIs in the operating system. We had to link KPIs to incentive system. We have to decide an 'owner' of each KPI on the Managing Board. We also have to consider how to communicate targets internally to executives and employees and to external stakeholders such as the business press and capital markets. then there is a need to monitor the results so that we can measure the sustainability of the strategy and again the communication of achievements to internal and external stakeholders as well as any consequences for underperformance."

Torsten Ende, Corporate Strategy Department, Siemens (Johnson e al., 2017: 749)

1. Mobilize commitment to change through joint diagnosis of business problems. . . . By helping people develop a shared diagnosis of what is wrong in an organization and what can and must be improved, a general manager [of a unit] mobilizes the initial commitment that is necessary to begin the change process....
2. Develop a shared vision of how to organize and manage for competitiveness. Once a core group of people is committed to a particular analysis of the problem, the general manager can lead employees toward a task-aligned vision of the organization that defines new roles and responsibilities. . . .
3. Foster consensus for the new vision, competence to enact it, and cohesion to move it along....
4. Spread revitalization to all departments without pushing it from the top. ... The temptation to force newfound insights on the rest of the organization can be great, particularly when rapid change is needed, but it would be the same mistake that senior managers make when they try to push programmatic change throughout a company. It short-circuits the change process. It's better to let each department "reinvent the wheel" - that is, to find its own way to the new organization....
5. Institutionalize revitalization through formal policies, systems, and structures. ... The new approach has to become entrenched....
6. Monitor and adjust strategies in response to problems in the revitalization process. The purpose of change is to create . . . a learning organization capable of adapting to a changing competitive environment.... Some might say that this is the general manager's responsibility. But monitoring the change process needs to be shared____
